Poor dietary intake has been shown among Ghanaian university students but little is known about the nutritional status of students at the Methodist University College, Ghana. The aim of this study was to assess the nutritional status of students of the Dansoman Campus of the university. The study was conducted from July to September 2013, using 150 students as participants. Anthropometric measurements were taken and nutritional intake assessed using a 7-day dietary recall questionnaire. The data was analyzed using the Statistical Package for Social Sciences (SPSS). The prevalence of malnutrition was found to be 21.3% with 16.7% being underweight and 4.6% obese. The mean height of the students was 160.5 cm and the mean weight was 55.1 kg. The mean intake of energy was 2024 kcal/day and the mean intake of protein was 73 grams/day. The results indicate that there is a need for intervention to improve the nutritional status of students at the university.
